Benton versus Brown.

Benton's measure for Annexation is both more " immediate" in time-more sure in certainty of consummation-more wase in fitness to unite a party-more calculated to be acceptable to Mr. Polk in point of confidence reposed by it in him and his administrationand more statesmanlike in its leading practical features than the Whig Milton Brown's measure. Some of the New York papers are censorious about "Indiana repudiation," as though Indiana had, or meant to repudiate a dollar of her debt. While the pious and just editors complain so loudly of this State, could'nt they just jog the memory of the Morris Canal Company, besides a dozen other scoundrels, who have four millions of our Bonds, for which we never got a cent? Those Eastern ras: als should not be allowed to go unwhipt, while the lash is so unmercifully applied to Indiana. Indeed, some of them seemed to think, from 1836 to 1840, that Broken Banks, broken fortunes, and broken character could be mended by dealing in Indiana Bonds, for which they never expected to pay a dollar—and they have kept their faith most of the police pay you for spying thousand francs which the police pay dealing in Indiana Bonds, for which they never expected to pay a dollar—and they have kept their faith most
